The Blinding of Isaac Woodard: American Experience

Tuesday, March 30 at 9 p.m.

In 1946, Isaac Woodard, a Black army sergeant on his way home to South Carolina after serving in WWII, was taken off a Greyhound bus after a heated exchange with the driver, who refused to let him get off to use the restroom. He was then savagely beaten by the local police chief who was later acquitted by an all-white jury. This injustice changed the course of history and ultimately jump-started the civil rights movement.

An aerial photograph of a vast solar farm. Rows of solar panels stretch across the landscape, creating a strong grid pattern. In the middle ground, a worker wearing a white hard hat, safety glasses, and a light-colored shirt stands among the panels, looking towards the camera. The lighting suggests a bright, sunny day.
