MESSAGE FROM VEGAS PBS

The Human Connection

By John Turner,
Chief Operations Officer, Vegas PBS

I've spent most of my career around technology. I've watched us go from analog videotape and satellite trucks to digital broadcasting, fiber optics, smartphones, cloud-based systems and now artificial intelligence. Some of those changes seemed enormous at the time. Today, we hardly give them a second thought.

I've generally embraced technology. I'm fascinated by what it can do. But I've also been around it long enough to know that technology doesn't appear out of nowhere. Somebody created it.

It's easy to focus on what artificial intelligence can do. But maybe we also need to spend a little more time asking where it came from, who built it, what assumptions went into it and who's using it now. Because technology itself isn't making those decisions. People are.

AI is particularly interesting because so much of what it learns comes from us. Human beings created the information it's trained on, and human beings aren't free of bias, assumptions blind spots or, for that matter, bad ideas. It shouldn't surprise us that some of those things can find their way into the technology we create. That doesn't mean AI is bad.

Its potential is enormous. AI can help advance medicine, improve education, make information more accessible, accelerate research and help us solve problems that might otherwise take years. But just because something can do remarkable things doesn't mean we stop asking questions about it. If anything, the more powerful the technology becomes, the more questions we should be asking.

That's where the upcoming PBS documentary Independent Lens: Ghost in the Machine comes into this conversation. It takes a skeptical look at AI and, in particular, at some of its origins. It asks questions about the people and ideas that helped shape its development, along with issues of bias and power.

That's also something public television has always done particularly well. It doesn't necessarily have to tell us what to think. Sometimes its job is simply to put something in front of us that challenges what we already know, makes us a little uncomfortable and starts a conversation.

Independent Lens: Ghost in the Machine certainly did that for me.

And if Independent Lens: Ghost in the Machine causes us to ask a few more questions about all of that, even some uncomfortable ones, then I'd say it's done exactly what a good documentary is supposed to do.

John Turner

The Ghosts of Pompeii

CAITIE BARRETT | NOVEMBER 11, 2026

Even thousands of years after its demise, the Roman Empire captivates us, and the ancient city of Pompeii is the place to understand it all. Volcanic ash created an unparalleled glimpse into the lives of ancient people who lived, worked, and played in this coastal city. We go on assignment with archaeologist Caitie Barrett to the latest dig sites to uncover new stories that still lie buried in this special place.

Penguins of Antarctica

DR. HEATHER LYNCH | FEBRUARY 9, 2027

Antarctica's name alone conjures imagery of the harshest environment on Earth, but the continent is more than its monochromatic color scheme of snow and ice. We go on assignment to the frozen continent with quantitative ecologist and National Geographic Explorer Dr. Heather Lynch. Meet the many species of penguins that waddle and swim through the freezing water, along with an abundance of other life, on a journey to the bottom of the world.

Saving Nature's Symphony

BEN MIRIN | APRIL 21, 2027

The world is alive with sound, and acoustic biologist and National Geographic Explorer Ben Mirin makes sure we never miss a beat. From the sweet songs of morning birds to the chatter of howling lemurs to the conversation of whales, we'll go on assignment on an auditory adventure. We'll tune in to wildlife symphonies, discover what those voices tell us about our planet, and transform that science into music.

Be Prepared for the Age of AI

Artificial intelligence (AI) is a tool that has entered nearly every sector of business and life. How much it is used ranges from automating small tasks to outright fulfilling entire workflows.

Even if you don't intend on using AI tools yourself, it's important to understand how this technology works to protect yourself from its unintended or even malicious use. You may even discover how it might make some parts of your day a little easier. For an expanded list of resources, visit vegaspbs.org/aihelp.

Pati's Mexican Table: The Desert's Treasures

Saturday, September 12
at 1:30 p.m.

The Coahuila Desert is a treasure trove that Pati explores piece by piece. A visit to Armando Guadiana's apple and quince orchard brings back a cherished childhood memory. Then she meets an eco-conscious young biologist, Jorge Madrazo, who takes her to Doña Vero's kitchen for her famous "Dinoquesadillas," but Pati discovers a charming local secret instead.

In the Americas With David Yetman: Oaxaca's People of the Sea and the Seaside

Saturday, September 26 at 9:30 a.m.

The Pacific coast of Oaxaca is home to a great marine diversity. For centuries, indigenous communities flourished there, exploiting the bounty of the sea and forests. Some of these remain, living with their ancient traditions. Other communities included enclaves of escaped slaves, who founded their towns in labyrinthine estuaries, preserving their ancient agricultural knowledge and customs.
